

Background

In recognition of the fact that Viet Nam veterans were exposed to a toxic environment during their service in Viet Nam, the government is funding an ongoing medical assessment for all Viet Nam veterans.

Viet Nam veterans have faced challenges that most New Zealanders would have difficulty comprehending. Veterans have faced the risk of injury or death in armed conflict, exposure to natural and man made hazards in a range of different environments and dealt with the effects of being in high intensity, stressful and dangerous situations for extended periods of time. As a result of their service experiences, veterans are susceptible to a range of health and wellbeing issues.

In addition to the stress of combat, Viet Nam veterans found that they were a target for anti war sentiment during New Zealand's participation in the Viet Nam war. This has compounded the impact of many veterans' experience. For many veterans, the lack of recognition of the role they played in Viet Nam and the failure of governments in the past to recognise that veterans were exposed to a toxic environment during their service prevented them from coming to terms with their experience.

Purpose of the Assessment

The main purpose of this medical assessment ("AMA") is to assess the general health and wellbeing of individual Viet Nam veterans. The medical assessment is also to ensure detection of recognised long term health effects of exposure to the toxic environment that existed in Viet Nam. Veterans' Affairs ("VA") will meet the cost of the medical assessment.
